Of weather and seasons

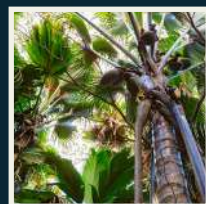

Characterised as the “Land of perpetual summer”, Seychelles enjoys of the the most equitable climates on the planet with summery weather and warm sea temperatures year round.

The year can be divided into two seasons : that of the north-west trade winds which blow from November through to March bringing much of the islands’ life giving rains, and the south-east trades winds which blow from May to September bringing with them slighter cooler temperatures and more lively seas, perfect for sailing.

The intervening months are normally periods of picture-perfect weather with calm seas ideal for swimming, diving & snorkelling and cruising the ocean.
